WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (AP)—The man who translated President Eisenhower's airport speech into Russian today for Premier Khrushchev is Alexander Akalovsky, a State Department interpreter. Mr. Akalovsky, 35 years old, was born in Yugoslavia and has been in the department's language service for four years. He is skilled in the Slavic languages generally.

He toured the Soviet Union recently with Vice President Richard M. Nixon.

Mr. Akalovsky is the chief of two interpreters the State

Department has assigned to the Eisenhower-Khrushchev meetings. The other is Natalie Kushnir, 25, a native of the Soviet Union, who has worked for the department as a staff interpreter for a year.

Miss Kushnir left the Soviet Union during World War II when she and her family were taken captive by the Germans. She is a graduate of Hunter College in New York.

Mr. Khrushchev brought his own interpreter with him. He is Oleg A. Troyanovsky, son of a former Soviet Ambassador to Washington.
